As an American, I strongly oppose the hunting of grizzly bears. Currently, there are only approximately 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face death by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other dangers. Permitting them to be killed for trophies would be cruel, unnecessary and shortsighted.

The Grisly Bear is a necessary piece of the complex community of animals that make up the western mountains and plains. Hunting for meat uses the resource of the animal. Trophy hunting only strokes the ego of the hunter while wasting the meat. Loss of domestic animals and roving free range cows are a slight economic loss that can be covered by an appropriate licensing program. Limited grisly hunting if found to be necessary to maintain the natural balance of the environment should be properly studied and limited licenses issue.

Even though Grizzly Bears may be delisted, please reconsider your plan to allow trophy hunting them. Condoning killing for sport is not right -- it has no relation to survival or need of any kind. It simply contributes to the unfortunate idea in our country that lives are expendable, whether human or animal. Killing for pleasure or any gratuitous reason is not a value the Advisory Council should support. Trophy hunting a living thing is just a skip and a jump to Columbine!

Please enter your comments for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana. If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. Please do not allow Trophy hunting of grizzly bears on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Thank you for reading my request.

Janice Bernard

I am a 67 year old hunter who successfully secures either a deer or an elk for my freezer just about every year. I help support the Montana Department of Fish Wildlife and Parks Department by purchasing hunting and fishing licenses each year. I am also a retired wilderness guide and have had backcountry encounters with well over 100 grizzly bears. I love seeing them as I love the experience of being out in the wilds each autumn hunting for deer and elk. There is absolutely no reason to hunt bears. The meat is inferior. Their populations self-regulate. Regardless of how their legal status ends up, the Greater Yellowstone grizzly population is isolated and under increasing threats from all kinds of human activity, including climate change. Do not institute a hunting season on grizzlies. That would be irresponsible and just plain wrong. Let these wonderful beasts live in peace in their wild habitats!

I am very strongly opposing any kind of Grizzly Bear hunting!

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Now is your chance to raise your voice for grizzly bears and tell the State of Montana's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council that you are entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival! No hunting!

To whom it may concern. I vehemently oppose your proposal to allow the hunting of Grizzly Bears in the State of Montana. Currently the Grizzly only occupies 2% of their historic range and this is no time to be reducing their numbers. further. Trophy hunting is a useless practice and should not be allowed with these keystone species whose numbers are still small. I particularly abhor the hunting of grizzly bears in Federally designated Wilderness Areas. These Wilderness Areas should be safe zones for these majestic creatures and not a shooting range for hunters. Human perceived population numbers created by arrogant biologists and so called wildlife managers should be super-ceded by allowing the population to naturally fluctuate.

The majority of Americans want wilderness and wildlife preserved. The citizens of Montana should not assume they have a right to kill grizzlies, or any other wildlife on federal lands of any kind (forests, Wilderness preserves, national parks, etc). Tourism, by people who come to see wild animals in natural settings, brings millions of dollars to Montana's coffers. We do not come to see our animals killed by the kind of people who enjoy killing. Even if your only interest is financial, I am sure that tourist dollars are greater than trophy hunter dollars in the aggregate.

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch's logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams. Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Bears are so alike humans, they think, feel and care deeply, they have families to raise and they have a right to life. They are so dear to the Creator, there is no good reason why they should be hunted. We have all the food we need to survive. They are peaceful if left alone and their food sources and their cubs are left alone. Bears are beautiful creatures and a gift to humanity. It is callous, cruel and inhumane to take their lives for sport, fun or just to make you feel big or relevant. It does not make you anything but a coward to hide behind a rifle and take life away from something else

Please enter your comments for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

The grizzly bear is a quintessential symbol of wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

I ask that Montana stop considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I demand that the State of Montana's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council to trash your idea for allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas. Your idea/plan runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzly Bears need to be protected and not hunted. Your council needs to own this responsibility to future generations of American. Grizzly Bears are not a food source for the hungry. Any individual who needs to kill for pleasure or needs to gain self esteem by killing an animal, is simply a sociopath, a coward, and deeply in need of self esteem. Such sick individuals out to have the guts to join the military and shoot at something that shoots back.

Humans have no inherent right to kill other animals, unless they have no other way to feed themselves. To kill other creatures for "sport" is simply barbaric. Trophy hunting is a pitiful activity, especially when guns are used. To turn our beloved wilderness areas into hunting grounds is despicable. Future generations will not forgive us. I am writing to say that I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

The grizzly bear is an American treasure and NO ONE has a right to hunt them. They belong to all of us. If a grizzly bear takes a rancher's cattle, the state should reimburse that rancher. If the state cannot afford this, then start a fund and many Americans will donate. Thanks for the opportunity to comment.

The policies of Montana need to change drastically. Do you not see that your mission has changed? Hunting rare animals is economically counterproductive. Yes, Grizzlies kill a calf, cow, sheep, lamb occasionally, and ranchers should be reimbursed for these losses. We like our ranchers here in Montana, but the truth is that it is not a major economic engine. Our public lands, forests, streams, mountains and our clean environment (the parts of it not poisoned by mining waste), is what lifts our economy, and provides public services. It's time make the call for Montana's hardworking citizens. Allowing wealthy outsiders and those who would trade the life of a cow or sheep for the life of a Grizzly, or any other top predator to kill rare species at will, and hang dead animals on their walls or floor should be outlawed, not facilitated. Reimburse ranchers for their losses but don't kill off the wildlife. It amounts to robbing the public coffers. No one individual has the right to slaughter, hunt, trap or poison some animal that belongs to the public domain. I say this not only for the wellbeing of the Griz and other top of the chain predators, but on the grounds of the economic wellbeing of most of the Montana's citizens whose lively hood depends on all of the visitors who come hoping to get a glimpse of our unequaled wildlife. Do the real service of protecting and nurturing the economic treasures of Montana: her rivers, her plains, her clean air, her mountains, her forests, and her wildlife, the likes of which is unmatched, and a treasure like no other.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Please protect grizzly bears from hunting. There may be a point in time where the grizzly population has expanded enough to consider allowing hunting, but that time has not arrived yet. My favorite memory of my last five-day trip to Montana was in northern Yellowstone National Park, where I was lucky to get to watch two three-year-old grizzlies work at retrieving a dead bison from a creek, while their mother languished a hundred yards away on a pile of snow. I would not return to Montana if grizzly hunting becomes a sport. Thank you for considering my comments.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am writing to tell the State of Montana's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council that I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. Stop the killing of innocent animals. The creator knows what you are doing and you will be held accountable and you will reap as you have sown.

Don't bow to ranchers or trophy hunting dollars. Montana will make more tourism dollars from a healthy grizzly population. They're already under enough stress from habitat loss, poaching and climate change. They'll all be gone before long. We don't need to hasten their demise for a few dollars.

Allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears is not a good idea. There isn't one good reason to allow those who find pleasure in killing animals as a trophy to satisfy their ego.

My family considers hunting a great outdoor sport, but doesn't consider killing for sport anything close to hunting .

But considers trophy hunting a disgusting perversion of the sport of hunting.

Killing just to kill, so you can brag, is not a sport

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch's logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Sirs, I am a land owner in grizzly bear frequented area, the Blackfoot Valley. These animals are welcome to share our land with us, as they have for millenium. To open a hunting season on these iconic animals is a terrible idea. The mortality rate is naturally high, if you include death via cars, trains, and accidental shooting by mistaking for black bears. Let these animals live, and thrive, in their native home, Montant.

Please enter your comments for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

Dear members of the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council,

I'm writing to express my opinion regarding a future State of Montana proposal that would allow trophy hunting of Grizzly Bears if they are removed from the Endangered Species Act.

To be clear, I am opposed to this action.

As an icon of American Wilderness, this species not only contributes to the legendary wildness of the great Western States, but also enhances the economic engine of tourism that attracts visitors to the small towns and recreational lands within the Rocky Mountains. Grizzlies are a keystone species for the land, as well as for the people that live in Western communities that depend on travelers ability to spend money in thier shops, restaurants and hotels.

I can't see how reducing the population of bears by allowing a few bear hunting permits could generate the same dollars as hundreds of thousands of tourists who wish to experience the untrammeled beauty of the wilderness.

I am not without feeling for ranchers who may lose livestock to wild animals, as I know thier work is often operating on slim margins. However, there are are other programs, including charitable groups that compensate ranchers and farmers for livestock losses, and state programs that help deal with problem wild animals. And while I'm not an expert, the IRS allows business deductions for livestock. I'm sure this can help offset the loss of the autumn sale price when livestock goes to market.

My fear is the continuing overdevelopment of America's last wild lands and open spaces, where people will push the natural world to it's end. I imagine a world similar to the ones depicted in the Blade Runner movies, where there are only desolate, dusty landscapes, high-tech "protein farms" without a tree in sight, and no clean air and water for anyone unless it's massively filtered. As an urbanite, I'm surrounded by 35 miles of city streets, traffic and buildings, with small elements of parks and forset preserves left. I regard it to be the greatest tragedy to see un-checked human development that in it's best form seems to make only a few people richer and the rest of us struggling for the scraps.

Wild places, with wild animals, are necessary to keep society from turning soul-less.

So please condiser defeating any proposal that blatantly attempts to wreck ecosystems and diminishes our natural heritage.

Thank you.

Trophy hunting is a wasteful practice that disrespects the ecosystem as a whole. If people needed food, that's one thing. But the killing of an animal like the bear has repercussions all the way down the food chain, and affects the ecosystem as a whole. Wilderness areas were designated to keep lands wild and ecosystems intact, and they should remain that way. Please stop the trophy hunting!

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

The Grizzly Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness in the western U.S. Grizzlies almost went extinct and although now that their numbers have improved, they are still in jeopardy and need our continued protection. I implore you to forbid trophy hunting of grizzlies. This practice is atrocious, outdated, and unsustainable anyway, regardless of what kind of animal it involves. Hunting for food is one thing but hunting for trophies takes a special kind of soullessness. Don't be known as a state that allows a barbaric practice like grizzly trophy hunting. Be better than this. Don't allow hunting lobbies to pressure you into this horrible practice. I also believe, since I know that money talks, that a thriving grizzly population will be more profitable from a tourism standpoint. If you allow grizzly hunting, their numbers will plummet again and people will have less incentive to visit a wild, natural place where they can admire these magnificent animals from a safe distance. Please do the right thing for everyone, the animals, people, the environment. Do not pander to a special group of hunters. Thank you.

Do not allow grizzly bear hunting in Montana. I am completely against this waste-of-life action.

Grizzlies are still protected by the ESA, and even if they become de-listed, they should not be trophy hunted. It's a disgusting, wasteful act on the part of cruel humans.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, and definitely should not be "controlled" by some human-conceived population limit.

Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I have hunted, but only for food. I do not agree with trophy hunting especially when you cannot tell if you are shooting a mother. I wish bragging rights for killing were not the basis for these decisions. I also believe that ranchers who loose cattle to wolves or bears should be reimbursed. The Masai in Kenya are compensated when lions kill their cattle. The fine for killing Grizzly 399 should run at 10 million dollars. Trophy hunting is by far a rich mans game so the fine has to be high. And any guide who gives advice about her should face a loss of license and a $500,000 fine. She is a good mom and raises her children to get along with people. If you allow hunting then please mark her and save her. I think the best thing to do is to protect grizzly bears from hunting.

NO MORE MACHO POINTS FOR GRIZZLY BEAR HUNTERS!!

Tell these guys to get a different hobby! So many of us working in wildlife conservation—they just destroy our efforts so they can have bragging rights with their buddies.

Grizzly Bears need a safe chance to recoup their numbers. Let's help them reestablish and maintain their natural population.

Why are we spending so much money to allow a select group to decimate our state's rightful and natural inhabitants? Way too much effort and expense so these guys can have what they think is a good time.

Please stop this.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Do NOT allow hunting of these amazing animals.

There is no reason to start the killing of grizzlies for trophies. Instead of guns, use cameras to get the trophy. The grizzlies will win and the photographic hunter will have their trophy.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. There are so few left! Do we really want to further reduce them, so a few can have trophies on their walls or floors? By now we know when we disrupt and destroy a natural ecosystem by eliminating certain predators, it has far reaching and unexpected consequences. And, don't grizzly bears have a right to live on this planet too? We must learn to coexist and manage animal populations in a responsible and humane way ~ For all of our sakes! Please reconsider this far reaching and potentially irreversible decision towards grizzly extinction. The fate of the planet depends on the decisions we make as its guardians. Please be thoughtful, humane and wise in yours. Thank you!

Wilderness is wilderness, and should be allowed to be so. And while I fully support hunting deer, duck, and other species that can be both a sport and feed people, I disagree with "trophy hunting" whole-heartedly. Such "trophies" really ought to be something we have grown out of. Killing a magnificent creature, irreplaceable and reflective of God's power and presence, is just a shame. At one time, it may have been necessary. It is certainly not now, and especially not just for a "trophy." NO hunting should be allowed in wilderness areas, and "trophy hunting" should be discouraged anywhere. Thank you for your thoughtful consideration.

The state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA.

I am opposed to this proposal.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

The very great majority of Americans want our iconic animals, of which the grizzly bear is a prime example, to be protected, and Americans believe that Wilderness Areas are among the best places to do that. The history of this situation is that grizzly bears were pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, and so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act. Therefore, it's only common sense to admit that allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including and especially deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. That's why I strongly oppose allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas. Common sense tell us that trophy hunting runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

There is no scientific, ethical, or moral argument for this kind of trophy hunting.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I strongly object to any "trophy hunting" anywhere, but to allow "trophy" Grizzly Bear hunting in wilderness areas is simply perverse. Wild lands and their inhabitants must be allowed to exist in peace, the way they were intended to be, by Nature. Humans are a destructive, callous, greedy species, and if left to those who collect "trophies" from the wilderness which remains, are selfish. Remember -- once wilderness becomes the "property" of humans (including hunters-for-fun). it loses its wildness. Just leave it alone!

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am absolutely OPPOSED to the idea of trophy hunting of grizzly bears being considered allowed in Montana. The population of grizzly bears needs to be protected and allowed to continue to recover from humans almost hunting them to extinction. In Nevada we've had no luck petitioning our Wildlife Board (the members are hunters) to cease the "trophy" hunting of any species, however, here's hoping your Advisory Council isn't all foaming-at-the-mouth hunters. Do stop killing these poor beasts - that "harvesting" (a ludicrous term). Killing animals is strictly a "game" for "sport" which means it is totally non-essential as weeding out the overabundance of a species happens naturally, and nature is best left alone by man who only corrupts everything man touches.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Thank you.

I am writing to express my opposition to the approval of trophy hunting of Grizzly Bears.

Grizzly Bears are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to natural conditions and habitats, and should not be determined by limits set by humans.

The State of Montana should not allow trophy hunting of grizzly bears, especially within Wilderness areas, because this will be contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Thank you for the opportunity to comment.

Why are people still engaged in this barbaric and inhumane practice of hunting animals merely for self-gratification and esteem? Why have we not evolved beyond this? Wildlife has already lost too much habitat and food sources because of human encroachment, industry, and pollution. Nature has a way of balancing itself, but if an animal population does need reducing let's leave it to the wildlife experts to decide which particular animals and how it should be done. Trophy hunting is not a responsible form of wildlife conservation. Do not allow trophy hunting of grizzly bears or any other animal.

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch's logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

What is the point of "trophy" hunting? There are better ways of creating revenue than killing grizzlies and once you permit hunting in wilderness much of the "wildness" is lost.

I strongly oppose allowing the trophy killing of Grizzly Bears. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

One of the great draws of Montana is its wildlife--open to the sky and free to live without hunters shooting them to endangered status again. Please think of generations to come if not for the freedom of these noble creatures.

Make the best choice for the whole, for the everyone, not just for special interests. Let's express true democracy. Madison is not just a founding father of the Constitution; he's also the forgotten father of American environmentalism. He rallied Americans to stop destroying the forest and the soil. He said for America to survive, Americans had to protect their environment. This includes biodiversity and understanding our survival is vitally connected to our environment.

Any environmental council, as well as counsel, worthy of the name should be able to recite the history of the grizzly bear in the last quarter of the 20th century. Hunted and pushed to the edge of extinction, the bare saving of them was thanks to their placement as deserving of protection by the Endangered Species Act. the idea that Montana, "the last great place" of wilderness, is considering sponsoring the hunting and elimination of them is astoundingly misguided. Instead, further measures to protect and promote their reproduction should be the concern of the Montana Advisory Council to the Governor.

I don't understand the thinking of the Montana Advisory Council. The Grizzly is still recovering from near extinction and you want to allow "Trophy Hunting" on State lands as well as the National Wilderness Preservation System of which many are adjacent to National Parks. These bears have a low birth rate and only occupy 2% of their original, lower 48 state habitat. Please allow them to have fluctuating numbers according to habitat conditions so that they can continue to survive as a species. Thank you

I am adamantly opposed to grizzly bear hunting of any kind, particularly if it's for trophy hunting. As the apex predator on the planet, humans have no need to hunt, most certainly not for "pleasure" in the 21st century. Destruction of wildlife for sport is an unusually cruel, selfish and entitled form of commercial exploitation that robs the remainder of the human population of the wild. It's incredibly narcissistic to kill an animal with all the technological advantages we have today. That's not a trophy, that's a stuffed ego.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the grizzly. Please reject any plans that would open these areas up for trophy hunting. Allowing hunters to kill bears, including in Wilderness areas, is counter-intuitive to increasing bear numbers and allowing the grizzly to further recover from its near extinction level numbers.

I would be willing to donate $1000 towards specially designed TARGETS for the young of Great White Hunters to use in practice shooting at something of no value.

The grizzly bear's natural population should not be endangered by allowing trophy hunting in their natural habitat. You must know in your hearts that the money you'd make from allowing this to happen cannot justify killing these icons of the wild lands, who are among the best known and most revered among our citizens. Their survival is already severely endangered by the threats they face in the modern world. The trophy hunters are only looking for a trophy head to hang on the wall--not a valid reason to engage in killing such a magnificent animal!

The state of Montana should not consider allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears should not be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

There is absolutely NO justification for trophy hunting. Make a sculpture to honor our fabulous wildlife. Don't kill wildlife. Honor the beauty of Mother Nature; Don't kill her.

Good Afternoon! I am writing today to ask you to please not allow a Grizzly Bear hunt. We tried to open back up bear hunting here in Florida in 2017 and it was a disaster that was stopped after a few days. People did not follow the guidelines and killed female lactating bears, young cubs and more bears than was allowed in their areas. It was supposed to become a yearly event but was so wrong on so many levels that it is postponed indefinitely and we have put common sense measures in place to avoid human-bear interaction. Thank you for your time!

REALLY, this is absurd. WE THE PEOPLE do not find any good reason for grizzly bears to be hunted, other than the egos of self centered, unethical, thrill seekers.

It is our obligation to do all we can to keep the natural beauty and creatures protected so that future generations can enjoy what is the jewel of the USA. Enough is enough of the INSTANT gratification of so few to destroy what future generations can and will cherish. I am grateful for the work of theodore Roosevelt and his wonderful foresight to protect and preserve our natural settings. WE owe to our country to do the right thing. Protect the grizzlies.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

An animal as magnificent as the grizzly bear deserves to live in wilderness without being killed for the entertainment of just a few. To allow trophy hunting of grizzlies completely disrespects the love most of the population holds for the wild animals with whom we share the planet. The whole concept of trophy hunting has become very outdated and meaningless, since there is nothing brave about it. It is a self-indulgent narcissistic pursuit that is cruel to the animal and the people who love it.

Please do not allow any hunting of grizzly bears in Montana. Montana should be very proud of its remarkable wild creatures.

Thank you for welcoming comments.

I oppose the FWP proposal to allow trophy grizzly bear hunting. Currently, the the grizzly is classified as endangered. Why the FWP is even considering this proposal demonstrates the total failure of your agency to manage wildlife populations. The focus of your agency should be to INCREASE the grizzly population so the bears can continue to reoccupy the animals' critical habitat.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

We need to stop the hunting of these animals. Thank you.

Killing for the thrill of killing. That is what trophy hunting is. It's one thing to use hunting to control an animal population, it's another when it is used to let select people kill an animal that does not have a large population to begin with. Considering to allow this boggles my mind.

Humans have, to name a few, caused extinctions (the grizzly was on the verge), and have basically wrecked the planet. The damage caused over the last century is catching up with us, and it is very scary thinking about where we are heading.

Everything on Earth is connected: Weather, ocean currents, animal life, wild habitats, insects, and so much more. As humans continue to disrupt these systems, the deeper the hole we are digging ourselves into.

Is there really a need to kill grizzly bears? How can this be justified? Please do not allow this.

Thank you

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear. If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch's logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am 100% entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Trophy hunting is such a disgusting reason to hunt. Not for food. Your State is one of the only States left that still actually HAVE grizzly bears! Let them live un-harassed by stupid glory seekers that care nothing for this ICONIC species that is a great part of American and now Montanan history. They deserve better than to be shot.

Please do not allow Grizzly Bears to be hunted for trophies. They have a right to live and exist in their world. Grizzly Bears are part of our history and are part of a healthy ecosystem. Why allow people to go deep into the bear's habitat and kill them? It's wrong and it's sick.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana. If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Please do not allow trophy hunting of the Grizzly Bear. The Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams. I'm opposed to trophy hunting of Grizzly Bears, especially in Wilderness designated areas. I'm totally supportive of other forms of hunting (for food/subsistence, for example), but there's no meaningful economic or ecological reason we should be allowing trophy hunting of any animals, especially bears. When it comes to game animals, the rule of thumb should be "You kill it, you eat it. Period."

Grizzly Bears are part of nature's natural order. As omnivores, they hunt prey, and also feed on carrion. When preying on live animals, they try to pick old, infirm or injured members of a herd. As such, they help keep the herd healthy and fit. Please ensure that there is a place for them in appropriate settings.

Dear Grizzly Bear Advisory Committee,

I strongly oppose any decision to open a hunting season for grizzly bears in Montana. These incredible animals were already hunted to near extinction, and are still fighting every day to regain the previous population numbers, habitat, and natural way of life that in many ways has been disrupted over the decades. There is no conclusive evidence that allowing legal hunting of grizzlies will make the land safer for livestock or hunters. Please do not go backwards and put these grizzly bears in any more jeopardy than they already are. Thank you.

I am totally opposed to allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. We encroach on their land and now we don't even want them living deep in the wilderness. Killing wildlife to hang on walls is not a sport, it is inhumane. Hunting to eat to stay alive is one thing, but killing for the fun of it to hang an animal carcass on the wall is insane. Humans have got to stop killing off the wildlife because we deem them a nuisance. Eradicating everything is not the answer and we need to learn to live with Mother Earth. Only a matter of time until we start eradicating ourselves after we've destroyed the wildlife. They are on earth for a reason. Trophy hunting is a disgusting and absolutely useless thing to do. If a man has to do this kind of thing to feel like a man, I feel sorry for him.

I strongly oppose allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears in MT. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live; they are vital to keeping balance in our wild lands, and these majestic creatures deserve our protection & preservation, NOT DESTRUCTION! Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. I strongly oppose the barbaric, unnecessary trophy hunting. THE MAJORITY OF AMERICANS DEMAND PROTECTION FOR GRIZZLIES!

he grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch's logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Now is your chance to raise your voice for grizzly bears and tell the State of Montana's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council that you are entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Dear Council Members,

I am writing to you in hopes that you will not allow trophy hunting of Grizzly Bears. Trophy hunting in general, is a ridiculous practice. To kill a living animal so you can show off its head on your wall, is inhumane. Please do not not vote for trophy hunting!

Thank you!

People are animals too. No better or worse than a grizzly bear. Are you planning to hunt down people, too?! Doubtful. Leave the bears in peace. They aren't YOURS to do with as you please - and MURDER them in cold blood. Get a grip on your selfish selves.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. Live and let live is a fine motto to follow in regards to the grizzly bear.

I am a longtime Montana resident and am absolutely outraged to learn your council is considering approval of trophy hunting of grizzly bears.

Grizzly bears are a quintessential symbol of wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, and, thankfully, in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

There are so few safe havens for grizzly bears, such as the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains wilderness areas.

Grizzlies are a keystone species that helps shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing hunting of grizzly bears. Any hunting of grizzly bears, including deep within wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing them to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

DO NOT PERMIT GRIZZLY BEAR HUNTING IN MONTANA!!

Thank you for the opportunity to submit comments. I strongly oppose trophy hunting of grizzly bears in Montana. While the grizzly bear is slowly recovering after near-extirmination, these majestic species remain absent from nearly 98 percent of their historic range.

We have worked so hard for four decades to bring the grizzly bear back from the brink of extinction, so the idea that Montana would authorize trophy hunting is discouraging and distressing. Trophy hunting is unethical and a vestige from a bygone era. It is particularly inappropriate for the iconic grizzly bear that is still imperiled and has a very slow reproduction rate.

Grizzlies face continuing threats from climate change, dwindling key food resources, illegal poaching, lack of connectivity among populations, and the negative impacts from roads and railroad tracks fragmenting their habitat. In fact, the past two years saw record rates of grizzly bear mortality in Montana. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears in Montana will only lead to a further decline of an already fragile population and would make a connected metapopulation-essential for recovery of the species-a near impossibility.

There is no evidence that trophy hunting is effective at managing grizzly bear populations. Studies show that trophy hunting does not reduce human-bear or livestock-bear conflict. Research also shows that trophy hunting does not increase social acceptance, but may have the opposite impact.

The Council must take into consideration the perspectives of Tribal Nations, many of which consider the Great Bear sacred.

If grizzly bears are delisted, at the very least, Montana must wait to see how they do without the Endangered Species Act's protections before allowing trophy hunting. It's just too soon to consider hunting. In 2017, Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks (FWP) recognized that a hunt should not be proposed immediately after delisting.

The #1 animal that tourists, who contribute about $1 billion annually to the economy of the Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem, hope to see in Montana is a grizzly bear. Bears are not only revered by many, but they are also very valuable to our nature-based economy.

My family and friends can attest to that. My wife and I were thrilled at seeing grizzly bears in Yellowstone National Park in 2013 and Glacier National Park in 2012 and they were highlights of our trips. In 2019, it took my nature and wildlife photography friends to Glacier National Park where we had the outstanding opportunity to photograph these bears in the wild. The guys just loved seeing the bears. And a prime reason for my booking a June 2021 trip to Yellowstone and Grand Teton National Parks for our family of 12 including kids and grandkids is to give them the opportunity to see their first grizzly bear in the wild.

I love seeing these magnificent animals in the wild so much, that I took my first trip to Alaska via a Brown Bear Photography Tour of Lake Clark National Park. We had an outstanding photography tour leader as well as bear guide who safely got us close to the bears to get incredible images. We stayed five nights in a lovely private lodge with excellent hosts. This is the most expensive trip I have ever taken, but it was worth every penny. Grizzly bears are invaluable to communities like the above. They are worth far more alive than dead.

Montana FWP and the Fish and Wildlife Commission must update the inaccurate and outdated Grizzly Bear Policy, which mistakenly states trophy hunting is an effective tool to prevent human-bear and livestock-bear conflict. Montana FWP should also put its energy and resources into assisting communities and recreationalists to prevent bear-human and bear-livestock conflict. Various conservation groups like Defenders of Wildlife can help with that.

Again, I strongly oppose trophy hunting of grizzly bears in Montana. Please save these bears!

Do any of you stop to think WHY we have Grizzly Bears - or ANY of our essential apex predators? I'm going to go out on a limb on say that many, if not most, of you believe there is a "divine" order to our world. That order is maintained by the animals created to be in it. WE, the human variety of animals, are the only ones who destroy everything in sight. The environment is struggling! We choke it, pave it, poison it and kill the very keystone species needed to maintain balance. Why is taking a life better than protecting it? There are enough deer and elk for every hunter in your constituency. Surely, a Grizzly can have one or two to survive ...

The best science has been put forward to you. Thousands of petitions have been sent. Why are you so hellbent on ignoring all of it? Montana is a great state. It's great because it's one of the last states that hasn't been mucked up by rampant development. It's a great state because of its environment. Why destroy all that?

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

I think if Montana wishes to retain its position as "the last, best place," it needs to consider the needs of its ecosystems. My friend found a huge Grizzly claw on a trail near Bowman Lake in Glacier. Her husband showed it to a ranger, who promptly confiscated it. That's because the NPS knows that as a keystone species, Grizzlies play an outsize role in their ecosystem, and that allowing tourists to gather their artifacts puts the bears at risk. Montanans should be proud that their ecosystems are so healthy that trophy-worthy grizzlies roam their public lands! Why would they want the same creeps that tie up access to public lands (oh, yes, I've been around Ennis and lots of places where hunting access is tough because of these wealthy so and sos.) to be able to cash in on wildlife produced and protected on OUR public lands? If you want to continue to be known as a wild and wonderful place with intact systems working the way the Creator intended, you have to walk your talk: keep the bears and keep it wild! NO trophy hunting of the grizzly!

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

I join millions of Americans who are proud of the heritage of our national forests and wildlife. I hold a major concern if your Council considers allowing the hunt for grizzly bears. They play a major role in our ecosystem and their numbers should be decided by natural means instead of a limit created by man.

I ask that you keep in mind the loss of so many of our species. It's not our place to manage by allowing trophy hunting---and, really, how can you consider baiting/using drones now and other means contrary to the hunt of our Native Americans years ago as being part of a sport?

In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

To Whom It May Concern,

As a tax paying citizen of this nation I am writing to urge you to stop any grizzly bear hunting in Montana. Grizzlies are an integral part of the environment and a critical indicator species. No grizzlies means our environment and wild habitat is critically degraded. These majestic animals want nothing to do with people and negative encounters with grizzlies are almost always the fault of the offending person. Domestic livestock losses are minimal and the loss more than outweighs the ranchers' cheap allocated grazing allotments. Grizzlies are also a species that a vast majority of people want to have in the wild as it represents what America at one time stood for. These animals deserve to be left alone and allowed to live wild and free and unhindered by hunters and sportsmen. Trophy hunting is an abomination and should be outlawed. Instead of relying on hunting licenses, our taxes should pay for conservation efforts before building fighter jets that can't even fly. Save our grizzlies!

Thank You,
Jon

It is imperative that you protect the Grizlys and do not allow them to be hunted or trapped. Although they are protected, they have extremely low birth rates and extremely high death rates. Their small population must continue to be protected. The Grisly Bear is the embodiment of the Wilderness and protecting them, especially from trophy hunters, is absolutely essential to maintain and growing their population. There is no question that it is essential to the survival of the species.

This is not an anti-hunter comment. I grew up hunting with my father and cousins, including black bear. Ours is a hunting culture of subsistence and respect. Trophy hunting is an abomination as it is for ego and a waste. As a resource manager, it is hard to understand why grizzly hunting should be allowed. They are still quite endangered. Their place in the environment is positive for maintaining healthy ungulate populations. That is not to say that they are not a scary predator, but they belong there. Like all of the wild Nature with which we are truly blessed here in the West, their populations must be respected. Trophy hunting is not respectful and it reflects poorly upon our Western society as a whole. Do not let greed and ego influence our wildlife management policies, so our descendants will be able to respect both Nature and us.

I visited Glacier National Park a few years back and while hiking on a trail a Mother Grizzle and her cubs were feasting on berries down the mountain from the trail. It was an awesome experience to see and the rangers had to close the trail for the rest of the week. I felt so lucky to see the Grizzle in a natural setting. I want my grandchildren to be able to experience such sightings and ask that no hunting for sport be allowed. Their numbers are still precarious and I feel that more citizens would benefit from seeing the bears in the natural habitat than a select few that would be allowed to hunt.

Please do not allow hunting of the grizzlies.

I am opposed to trophy hunting in general. It's cruel and selfish. Animals are not ours to do with us as we please.

As for grizzly bears, the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are delisted from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed in Montana, iconic Wilderness areas like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am entirely opposed to allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Letting trophy hunters shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

I have been a hunter and Life Member of the National Rifle Association for over half a century. There are less than 1500 Grizzly bears in the lower 48 states. If there are too many in one small area, please trap and move them to an unpopulated Wilderness Area, rather than have a hunting season. The manpower and costs of relocation can easily be paid for by various non-profit groups. In the last 50 years, I have witnessed the benefits of not hunting, as well as hunting, in good game management. This situation is a case for not hunting.

Do the right thing and stop this killing of helpless creatures which have as much right to live here as we do. We can live in harmony with earth's wildlife. I frequently lead large motorcycle groups of riders thru Montana and we love it, but if you proceed to authorize the killing of grizzly bears, we won't set foot in your state again and will encourage everyone to do the same. Do the right thing. Thank you.

Please don't allow this ridiculous idea to continue. Not only will it put the grizzly bear back in danger of going BACK on the ESA, but it will make every current safe haven for grizzlies just another hunting ground. Just because progress on their care is being made, doesn't mean it should be taken advantage of.

My family (4 members) and I are relying on you to STOP this horrific intrusion on your grizzly bear population! DO NOT ruin one of the stalwart features of your beautiful state. Please note: We will NEVER come to Montana again, nor will we purchase any product from Montana again!

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Please allow nature to limit these apex animals, not man. There are alternatives to allowing open hunting on them. I know there are hundreds of people that would like nothing better than to take their expensive guns and try to shoot one of these magnificent animals. I would like to see a grizzly bear up close out of awe and respect, knowing the animal could kill me with one swat of its huge clawed paw. That doesn't make me want to shoot it. I enjoy going to shooting ranges with my sons, but I don't hunt animals.

Q3

Please enter your comments for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

We have seen MANY times what happens when an apex predator is removed from the ecosystem. Grizzlies are NOT trophies; they are a critically important piece to the health of ruminants. When apex predators are removed, ruminant herds suffer and so does the ecosystem/environment. Why do we have to keep relearning the consequences of bad behavior? Be smarter than that. Don't create the problem in the first place.

An animal is not on hearth just for being killed to become carpets, or a dead beast on your wall. Bears are beautiful for all of us to enjoyed to look at them. If I see a wild animal, I leave him alive behind me for others people to see. When a trophy hunter goes by, nature is dead for ever. Let bears leave.

Please, no trophy hunting of Grizzly bears!

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management.

In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. Again, PLEASE NO TROPHY HUNTING!

I am completely opposed to any kind of hunting, but especially the barbaric practice of "trophy" hunting! I can't think of anything more disgusting... shame on you for placing profits and ego above nature. The wilderness belongs to wildlife... do not allow human greed and selfishness to destroy it! Stop the hunting and killing of grizzly bears. It is murder!

The "Great Bear" is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams. Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the State of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I personally am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary not only to the definition of "Wilderness Areas," but also to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

We only have to look at the near-extinction of wolves to see the impact of their loss in the ecosystem: Coyotes spread across the continent and now are found in every one of the 48 contiguous States.

Please do not allow these majestic, apex predators be allowed to be hunted for trophy purposes. The grizzly bear is a keystone species and as such should never be allowed to be hunted as they are an invaluable resource to their ecosystem. Their birthrates are low and as they make progress on increasing their numbers why should they be penalized for that . . . they were here before us and we as custodians for this planet need to learn a valuable lesson. That is Mother Nature controls that balance and if we are to learn anything from history is that we are NOT good custodians of our planet. Please leave a legacy where the grizzly is viewed a wonderful and contributing creature to the diversity of Montana. I have been to your state several times and have yet to see a grizzly in the wild. Please do not allow the hunting of the beautiful animals. Thank you!!

We need to save the planet and all the birds, animals, fish that we can! Instead of killing off any animals we desperately need to save the water, air and stop polluting our earth and work to that goal!!!

Today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states, and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

The state of Montana should not allow trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA, especially on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Therefore, I am vehemently opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

1500 bears is a tiny number of bears to allow ANY killing at all. It is shameful that this is even being considered. No one should be able to hunt on public lands and hunting for grizzlies deep in the wilderness should not be happening under any circumstances whatsoever.

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch's logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Do not push grizzly bears to the brink of extinction with trophy hunting, after all the efforts put forth to restore their population. Allowing natural conditions to control their population numbers is the best way to manage a struggling species. They in turn will help naturally control other inhabitants of the ecosystem. When man interferes, the ecosystem is denied it's natural regulatory controls. Thank you!

First, the purpose and definition of Wilderness is that it is a place free from human intervention. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears is intervention. No hunting of grizzly bears should ever be allowed in wilderness areas, period. Second, the bigger picture is that grizzly bears have been on the brink for a long time. A grizzly is no contest for hunters with long range rifles. There should be no trophy hunting of grizzly bears at all.

Many people travel to our National Parks for once in a lifetime experiences, including sightings of grizzly bears. No hunting of grizzly bears should be allowed on public lands, especially public lands adjacent to National Parks.

I am lucky enough to travel with regularity to Glacier National Park. I spend money in Montana. Please don't waste the incredible amount spent on reviving the grizzly bear by destroying this fragile population via trophy hunting.

I vehemently oppose hunting grizzlies for trophies. That is an unacceptable, detestable practice. These iconic animals lead lives of great value in their ecosystems and they are entitled to life as are other wild creatures. For people to somehow think murdering them proves bravery on the part of the hunter is an obscenity. That is definitely NOT the relationship we should nurture between people and nature.

I am against trophy hunting for Grizzly Bears.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

This is a cruel and sadistic entertainment. Animal abuse is closely connected to criminal behavior. Ask the FBI. Serial killers often take home and save "trophys" from their victims. Panties, jewelery, a drivers license, etc. These bear killers will do the same. They will save some reminder of their minutes of sick thrill killing to gather dust someplace. The excitement soon wears off and they have to go out and kill again. Decent, wholesome, normal, civilized people do not need this kind of sick and perverse entertainment. Sad for the bears and their families.

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch's logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

They belong there, have a right to be there as a natural part of the ecosystem, and should be protected, not hunted.

Stop hunting the grizzlies of Montana. History has shown the effects of over hunting — it's time we finally listen. Ecosystems are dependent upon apex predators to maintain equilibrium. Hunting the grizzlies destroys this precious balance and causes more problems for other wildlife as well the surrounding human populations.

It's time to stop repeating the same mistakes when it comes to wildlife management.

With the dramatic pressure on wildlife, and the current slow return of these iconic animals to only some of their range, it would be a tragic mistake to allow them to be hunted. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. To allow killing them in previously protected, safe havens is counter to good stewardship of both the bears and our healthy wilderness. Please let them continue to recover, and to gain a foothold in all their former ranges. Thank you for considering my concerns. I hope we can continue to see these bears thrive and enrich our wilderness.

Spotting and photographing wildlife in the wild is one of the most exciting things that can happen to a tourist exploring the beautiful west. I shoot with a camera...never a gun...and my thoughts on trophy hunting turns my stomach. Our natural world needs it's wild animals. Grizzly Bears need protection, as do our wolves.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Killing grizzly bears for fun? That is insane! It is mere cold blooded murder and not even remotely acceptable in this day and age. We are supposed to be intelligent and enlightened beings, but just to make money you are allowing animal murderers to kill innocent beings that are an essential part of our environment and have the right to life just as we have is barbaric and anti environment. No more trophy hunting of the noble bear or any other of God's creatures!

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

I am entirely entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Trophy hunting is inhumane, and despicable. The only hunting that is ethical is if the entire animal is utilized for food and utilizing the fur for purposes of staying warm, not as a blanket on the floor or on a wall.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch's logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

The grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears should not be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

No trophy hunting!

Please do not allow trophy hunting of grizzly bears on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Grizzly bear hunting needs to be banned. Just because there's a large number of insecure guys with little penises and big guns, guys like Donald Trump Jr, who feel they need to shoot a massive grizzly bear to validate their manliness, does not make it right. How much sport is involved when the prey is 8 foot tall and weighs 700-800 pounds, and you're using a high powered .375 rifle with a long range scope? That's right, not much sport involved at all. It's like shooting a Volkswagon from a safe distance. Do the right thing and protect these majestic creatures. Those chicken shit assholes can find a different sport or activity to compensate for their body's obvious lack of testosterone production.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

The earth needs keystone species. They need to be honored for the critical role they play in the earth's ecosystems, helping to maintain biodiversity and keep ecosystems healthy. In fact, humans need to return to being a keystone species. It's because we have seen ourselves as separate from nature and her ecosystems, that earth has gotten so out of balance and prone to extremes. Now is the time to change that, before it's too late. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am very much opposed to any hunting of grizzly bears in Montana. The northern Rocky Mtn bears have to be viewed as one large population, and preserving the Montana bears is a vital component of this population. Your bears play an important role in sustaining this population, contributing to its genetic diversity and offering insurance that the entire population will survive during this period of climate change and instability. Food sources and bear populations may fluctuate in unpredictable ways. Preserving all components of this population in Mt, Wyo, Id, Wash, and perhaps adjoining states, helps to sustain the entire meta-population over time.

I am opposed to trophy hunting of all types and stand against widening the list of legal prey to include grizzlies. As the daughter and granddaughter of ranchers, I was taught to respect nature and wildlife, to only kill when necessary, and to take no pleasure in doing so. That code of the West seems to be evaporating, which saddens me and many of my generation. There is no honor or sport in wanton killing. Those who feel impelled to do so should take a good, long look at themselves and figure out why they derive pleasure from taking something's life. Please don't promote this type of sad, broken behavior and demean God's creations by expanding trophy hunting opportunities to include grizzly bears. Thank you.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears in Montana's wild areas. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the grizzly bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

People really have no limits it seems to be. If there are no laws or actions telling people NO do not destroy and entire species in your state then there may be no limits taken by the public in Montana. Other states on the U.S. that are over populated have close to completely decimating their wildlife and it is nothing but incredibly sad. Please understand that every living thing with us plays its own role for our environment. Killing an animal that deserves to be here just as much as us is truly barbaric, and we should be better than that since we have the ability. Save the grizzlies and the true majesty of Montana's environment.

The Grizzly bear is a one of the symbols of America out there walking around & they need protected not opened up to trophy hunting. They need to be in the woods making babies (cubs) & grow old to die of natural causes not taken out by some hunter just so he can hang out on his wall or lay it on his floor. Let them live wild & free with no threat from man.

Please enter your comments for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

I entirely oppose the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

I am opposed to allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies.

There is a good economic reason too. Your state would make more money from ecotourism in habitats protecting bears than from a few hunting licenses.

I am writing as one who enjoys Montana's wild areas. I would like to register my vote against the possibility of the allowance of trophy hunting of the grizzly bear if the bear should lose it's standing as an Endangered Species. The grizzly is a symbol of the beauty and wildness of the state of Montana and has already suffered a record number of deaths over the past two years while still listed under the ESA - the delisting from the ESA and the addition of the allowance of trophy hunting would decimate the population of this magnificent animal.

Please consider the informed comments from those who specialize in wildlife, like Wilderness Watch:

"Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival."

The Grizzly Bear is listed as Endangered within the Endangered Species Act. When delisted the bears will still be threatened with the limited use of their historic range and low population numbers, just enough to survive. Trophy hunting of these great bears after they are no longer listed as endangered is reckless and demonic for this keystone species. The range that they currently have needs to be safe for them, not with risk of death by trappers and hunters doing "wildlife management". Please consider the detriment of opening up hunting for these incredible animals once they are no longer listed as "endangered." The entertainment of few does not benefit the remainder of the population.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear. I strongly urge you to ban trophy hunting of grizzly bears.

The grizzly bear is not only featured on Wilderness Watch's logo, but the Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

I am writing because I am 100% OPPOSED to permitting trophy hunting of grizzly bears in Montana. Please DO NOT permit this.

Grizzly bear populations were decimated and the species was nearing extinction in 1975. It has taken 45 years of very slow progress to get them to their current numbers. And those numbers have improved, but are still very low. In the continental U.S., they are only found on 2% of their original range. And there are only 1500 bears. Grizzlies have already suffered record-breaking numbers of deaths in Montana in the past 2 years!

Compound their large number of deaths in your state, plus the grizzly bear's low reproductive rate, and add in all the deaths that are occurring due to hunters (who shouldn't be killing them!), and from being hit by cars, buses, and trains. Unfortunately, the grizzly bears are also being killed by ill-informed people using heavy-handed "management" techniques. Bears can be managed and livestock can be protected without killing the grizzlies.

The species still has a long way to go to be considered well-established. At the rate they are currently dying, even the slow pace of the past 45 years will not be maintained. Please do not jeopardize further by allowing trophy hunting.

Grizzlies are an iconic species and an invaluable part of our wilderness and ecosystem. Please do NOT give in to a small minority that wish to hunt and kill. The vast majority of citizens are opposed. Please do NOT permit trophy hunting of grizzly bears.

Thank you.

This is just another way man is destroying this country. Killing grizzly bears is all about the money. Grizzly Bears and other predators all are part of the eco system that makes nature flourish. People who kill wild animals are all about how people are destroying the countries eco system. Man has caused the extinction of over a million species of wildlife since the 1960's. Wildlife spreads the vegetation so we have trees and other vegetation to clean the air we breathe, bees, and other insects fertilize our crops. So when do we stop destroying our environment? When it is too late?

Nurturing the love of kill is archaic and unethical, please leave the animals and wildlife alone - they have a right to live.

Let the Grizzlies live and do what Nature intended them to do. They don't deserve to be made into a rug or have their head on someone's wall just for sport witch it is not.

To whom it may concern,

We understand that the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

The Great Bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

We are entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Thank you for your serious consideration.

Please, not trophy hunting of grizzly bears. These majestic animals were once almost hunted to extinction in the lower 48 states and they still only occupy 2% of their former range. What chance does a bear have against a high-powered rifle and scope? NO TO GRIZZLY BEAR TROPHY HUNTING. Thank you.

Do not kill grizzly bears or grizzly bear cubs. Why would you?

Even if they've wondered on public lands that someone has their herd grazing on buying a permit to do so, grizzlies belong first (1st). Grizzlies belong first, 1. They were here first.

There are only so many grizzlies left, 72, leave them alone. Take the grazing permits away first. Get your priorities straight. Use your God given brain would you. Stand on your on 2 feet, be a man or woman, use your brain and do the right thing.

SAVE THE GRIZZLIES! SAVE THE GRIZZLIES AND THEIR CUBS!

Thank you.

I'm a retired physician living in Missoula. I greatly enjoy hiking, backpacking, and photographing in Montana's beautiful wilderness areas — one of the main reasons I live here. Grizzlies are an integral part of these wild areas and under no circumstances should there be trophy hunting. Instead we need to work on connectivity between the Northern Rocky Mt. and Yellowstone ecosystems to ensure genetic diversity in their population, which is still at risk because of the increase in our population. Respectfully, Jerome Walker, MD

Please don't open Montana's wilderness areas to grizzly hunting. The population still needs to be protected and corridors need to be opened between the Glacier NP/Bob Marshall Wilderness areas and the greater Yellowstone area. I come to Montana every summer to camp and backpack and I look forward to the chance to see Grizzly bears in those wilderness areas.
