Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival

We need to protect wildlife. Eco systems of the world depends on balance. Diminishing a species that maintains the overpopulation of grazing species irradiates the integrity of the land and water.
A good example of what happens when a species population is eradicated was the removal of wolves how it declined the land and the gaming species due to over population of grazing species.
May we learn by our past tragedies and not repeat them.

No trophy hunting for grizzlies.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

The grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, but your great state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Please don't allow trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

We need to protect wildlife. Eco systems of the world depends on balance. Diminishing a species that maintains the overpopulation of grazing species irradiates the integrity of the land and water.

A good example of what happens when a predator species population is eradicated was the removal of wolves how it declined the land and the gaming species due to over population of grazing species. This Action resulted in the overpopulation of the elk it no longer had a predator to keep balance which then led to the destruction of the forest which then allowed for erosion. This action was in 2014 the walls were brought back in 2018 to undue the damage man created..... this monstrosity could've been avoided if there was not money involved in the hunting and gaming industry of elk that pushed for this action.

May we learn by our past tragedies and not repeat them.

Tread lightly !!!!

Grizzly bear hunting in Montana is more of a sociological and political tool rather than a biological one. These bears are continually threatened by all manner of insults and impediments by humans to their way of life, a life worth living. The consequences of all considered actions must be thoroughly studied before any action is taken. One concern comes to mind - the possibility of inbreeding as a result of very restricted movement. Sadly, animals do just fine until we intrude. I stand firmly against the trophy hunting of grizzly bears.

Grizzly bears are the ultimate symbol of wilderness. As a top predator, they are a keystone species and their health affects the health of the entire ecosystem where they live. And they are an at-risk population. The idea of allowing them to be trophy hunted on public lands in Montana is insane. Please stop this!

We are OPPOSED to any form of trophy hunting of grizzly bears anywhere in the USA.

The grizzly bear is an icon of the North American Wilderness and a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where the great bear still roams.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

We are entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Although I strongly support hunting in general, I cannot believe that Montana would even consider such a reckless consideration as to start going after the grizzly bear.

The grizzly bear is still facing an enormous uphill battle. And hunting them would cause irreparable reversal to the small gains the grizzly bear has thus far achieved.

This is a ridiculous idea and, at least for the foreseeable future, should be vigorously opposed.

Thank you.

Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council Public Comments

In life and in business, you are either part of the problem or part of the solution. I sincerely hope the Montana Grizzly Bear Advisory Council will choose to be a significant part of the solution rather than a major part of the problem.

Thanks to decades of advocacy by caring individuals like me, grizzly bears in the lower-48 states are currently protected under the Endangered Species Act (ESA), making it illegal to harm, harass, or kill these bears, except in cases of self-defense.

Unfortunately, the state of Montana is currently considering a plan to authorize trophy hunting of grizzly bears as soon as ESA protections are removed. I am speaking up for grizzlies by letting the Montana Grizzly Bear Advisory Council know that I strongly oppose trophy hunting.

A lawsuit against the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (USFWS) in 2017, when the agency illegally tried to strip ESA protections from grizzly bears living in the Greater Yellowstone region, was successful. At that time, the suit also successfully blocked planned grizzly bear trophy hunts in Idaho and Wyoming.

We've stopped grizzly bear trophy hunting before, and now I ask the Montana Grizzly Bear Advisory Council to protect the Great Bear once again!

Thank you for the opportunity to submit comments. I strongly oppose trophy hunting of grizzly bears in Montana. While the grizzly bear is slowly recovering after near-extirmination, these majestic species remain absent from nearly 98 percent of their historic range.

I and many others who love these bears have worked so hard for four decades to bring the grizzly bear back from the brink of extinction, so the idea that Montana would authorize trophy hunting is discouraging and distressing. Trophy hunting is unethical and a vestige from a bygone era. It is particularly inappropriate for this iconic grizzly bear that is still imperiled and has a very slow reproduction rate.

Grizzlies face continuing threats from climate change, dwindling key food resources, illegal poaching, lack of connectivity among populations, and the negative impacts from roads and railroad tracks fragmenting their habitat. In fact, the past two years saw record rates of grizzly bear mortality in Montana. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears in Montana will only lead to a further decline of an already fragile population and would make a connected metapopulation-essential for recovery of the species-a near impossibility.

There is no evidence that trophy hunting is effective at managing grizzly bear populations. Studies show that trophy hunting does not reduce human-bear or livestock-bear conflict. Research also shows that trophy hunting does not increase social acceptance, but may have the opposite impact.

The Council must take into consideration the perspectives of Tribal Nations, many of which consider the Great Bear sacred.

If grizzly bears are delisted, at the very least, Montana must wait to see how they do without the Endangered Species Act's protections before allowing trophy hunting. It's just too soon to consider hunting. In 2017, Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks (FWP) recognized that a hunt should not be proposed immediately after delisting.

The #1 animal that tourists, who contribute about $1 billion annually to the economy of the Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem, hope to see in Montana is a grizzly bear. Bears are not only revered by many, but they are also very valuable to our nature-based economy.

Montana FWP and the Fish and Wildlife Commission must update the inaccurate and outdated Grizzly Bear Policy, which mistakenly states trophy hunting is an effective tool to prevent human-bear and livestock-bear conflict. Montana FWP should also put its energy and resources into assisting communities and recreationalists to prevent bear-human and bear-livestock conflict.

Again, I strongly oppose trophy hunting of grizzly bears in Montana. Please choose to be part of the solution rather than a force for the extinction of this remarkable species, a major tourist draw for Montana's economy.

I'm writing to you in support of the ESA's prohibition on killing grizzly bears. If the ESA discontinues federal protection of grizzly bears, the last thing your state should consider is allowing them to be hunted by trophy hunters.

Such action would negate 40 years of protection for the iconic species and would likely require another ESA recognition of grizzlies as endangered.

So please don't consider ever allowing trophy hunting of such an incredible and valuable species.

Thank you for considering my comments.

Hello,

My family are ranchers in Montana and we are all independent folks. The grizzly bear is also independent and worth honoring just as we should honor all of nature and the sacred earth. Please do not allow any hunting of the noble grizzly bear.

Respectfully,

Melanie

The grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Planning for future trophy hunting of grizzly bears should not allow hunting on wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks. Grizzlies are a keystone species and protecting them from hunting is necessary to honor the spirit motivating the preservation of these remaining lands that can remind us of what has been lost from our national inheritance.

Dear Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council,

I am writing to you in regard to the Grizzly trophy hunting. It is incomprehensible for me that anyone feels the need to kill a majestic animal simply to mount a body part on i.e. their wall, it says a lot about the person to be frank. But let me talk about the bear instead. Their recovery has been far too slow, low reproductive rates exacerbate the continued excessive rates at which grizzlies die. In other words, you need to protect them, not wonder whether or not you should allow them to be killed even faster. You are a very lucky state to be able to boast the presence of such an iconic species, it should be a source of pride for you, not content. Therefore, I am glad that you are accepting public comments on the matter, which will hopefully show you that the majority of people does appreciate wildlife diversity and intact ecosystems. It would be wonderful, for once, to focus on doing the right thing instead of giving in to these strange special interest groups with way too much power and no concern for the greater good. Do people need to learn to better coexist? Yes, and that will mean that their antiquated practices may need to change, but that's how it goes. We all have to adapt. There are plenty of methods available for folks to mitigate human/livestock/wildlife conflict if that is the problem.

Thank you for your time,
C. Hasenhuttl

I am a researcher studying the behavior of wild animals for over 40 years. I am very familiar with the biology and behavior of large carnivores in the American west. The grizzly, an icon of the American wilderness, is just beginning to recover from decades of killing and mismanagement. Members of this highly intelligent, sentient species should be left alone in their wilderness habitats to live the way they have lived for tens of thousands of years, long before humans existed in North America. It is we who have invaded their lands; not the other way around. No good scientific rationale exists for hunting these bears. Listen to the scientists and do not allow them to be killed, again, in your state.

Please reject hunting and allow the grizzlies to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Good day,

I wanted to write to let you know that I am entirely against allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears harms the species numbers. Allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy their habitat is essential for their long term survival.

We as people have to hold ourselves to a higher standard and do what is right for ourselves and for nature.

Thank you for your time.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

I am writing to inform you that I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Thank you for your consideration of my comments.

Get clear on this. Your tourist economy is bigger than your hunting economy. Destroy the grizzly, and you destroy your economy.

Our family ventured out to Yellowstone for the first time two years ago. It was a dream come true, a trip we had planned for years. We were completely in awe. The breathtaking beauty and stunning wildlife brought new meaning to the phrase "natural treasures" The experiences we had both within the park and its outer perimeter were nothing short of amazing. One of the most memorable was seeing a Grizzly Bear, peacefully sitting upon a grassy hill, shyly keeping to himself. These bears were here long before us and have the right to their land without fear of humans extinguishing them altogether. There are so few left and they reproduce at such a slow rate-if we continue to hunt and destroy them there will be none. We so often take the blessings of nature for granted. Once those blessing are gone, they are gone for good. Is that what you want for your children and grandchildren? Is that what you want your legacy to be? People come from all over the world to view these magnificent creatures. Surely we can continue to peacefully co-exist. Please stop the trophy hunt.

Please exercise your regulatory powers to provide powerful stewardship of the animal and natural resources within your jurisdiction. Trophy hunting will not advance the cause of balanced life within the wilderness for its residents where natural factors determine the ebb and flow of the various species. Surely the plight of other creatures such as the bison and it's near extermination can act to guide your decision making. The human species needs to recognize its place within the whole of Nature by not acting as some kind of superior conqueror entitled to take and kill whenever and whatever it desires.

Thank you for your consideration of my comment.

I am opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing them to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. This is barbaric and cowardly.

While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

I strongly oppose the state of Montana's proposal to allow trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting is a disgrace to the human race and should be banned everywhere in the world. The United States could lead by example here! We're in the middle of the 6th extinction in the history of mankind and we cannot afford to destroy more species. Grizzly bears must NOT be trophy hunted!

Please do not allow for trophy hunting of grizzly bears!

If we don't hunt these animals, they will have no fear of man and will harm our children. Do not cave to the cries of anti-hunters who ignore the documented cases of what really happens when bears multiply without management. If the risk of some people dying from COVID-19 necessitates shutting down the entire state, how much more should we manage man-eating predators? Montana isn't unsettled wilderness anymore. The bears need management and the fear of man to ensure a safe and free society. We the people, the hunters, farmers, and the like, who are the true stakeholders and true authorities on managing our wildlife, cannot allow urban anti-hunters who will never even see a bear, much less be attacked by one, to dictate how we manage our wildlife.

 2. About what percent of ranchers lease public ground for open range summer grazing in areas of high bear conflict, and do these leases extend well into any bear recovery zones and or in prime grizzly habitat.
 3. Do most ranchers in high bear conflict areas calve in enclosed areas or in more open ranges.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. We hunters pay millions for habitat and wildlife conservation, hiking trails and the like which anti-hunters use for free. It is an a priori of Montana life to hunt, eat, and enjoy wildlife, we do it with species small to large, including black bears, in many places without harvest quotas, and it's no problem. Yet when it comes to grizzly bears, if a few tags for hunting them would be issued, it's supposedly a crime against nature, against biodiversity, and will ruin the species forever according to many? Absolutely false. Hunting holds up Montana's wildlife. We hunt wolves. Yes, wolves, the highly controversial animal. Yet grizzly bears are off the table? I noticed that much of the sentiment against hunting grizzlies in the comments posted originates out of state, from people who have nothing vested in our state. Accepting the statement from an out-of-state tourist on the same level as a Montana rancher struggling with grizzly predation is unacceptable. For all the tourists out there who want to see grizzlies? Yellowstone National Park is the answer. We hunt elk, deer, black bear, moose, and so much more year after year and it is recognized by both Democrats and Republicans as the Montana way of life, yet grizzly bears are treated differently?

Grizzlies have been a valuable part of the ecology of this region for hundreds of years. Humans have the regrettable tendency to want to remove any part of an ecological system that seems to interfere with what they want - whether the want is advisable or not. It is extremely inadvisable to promote the killing of grizzlies just because they seem to interfere with human activities. the better way is to accommodate grizzlies, cut back on the human activities, which are usually damaging to the environment (like raising cows instead of buffalo). Let Grizzlies live and be grizzlies in the wild.

I whole-heartedly oppose the trophy hunting of Grizzly bears. Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Please do not allow trophy hunting of these bears.

Thank you,
Kathy Day

Please don't allow hunting of grizzly bears in Montana. There are not that many grizzlies outside of (or even inside of) protected federal lands (National Parks, etc.), and their population on this continent is already a mere fraction of the number and range they used to have.

Subject: Public comments on de-listing of Grizzly Bear

To the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council,

The Grizzly Bear is the quintessential symbol of wilderness, especially in parts of the western United States and Alaska where this great bear still lives.

In the recent past, grizzly bears were pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, because of this they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA) in 1975. While some progress has been made over the last 40-plus years in the recovery of grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,923 (based on federal 2019 Bear Recovery Report) grizzlies in the entire contiguous 48 states and they are currently found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Although the grizzly bear is still protected by the Endangered Species Act, the state of Montana is now considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Such hunting would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If Montana allows trophy hunting in iconic Wilderness areas in Montana, like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains, Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for this magnificent bear. These bears are a keystone species that have helped to shape the ecosystems where they live. What I want to know is this, if we have so many grizzlies in the Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem that it may be de-listed, why aren't we moving excess bears to other recovery zones? Or, why haven't we worked out a buffered corridor between the GYE and other recovery zones to the northwest that would allow them to migrate out of the area? Of course, trying to create a corridor now with human-created urban sprawl, could be downright impossible, but still. In my view, permitting trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Grizzly Bear to fully recover and reoccupy habitat critical for their continued survival.

Thank you for this opportunity to comment.

Sincerely,

Lee Bennett

Please stop the senseless killing of bears in Montana. Bears, like all other wildlife, form an integral part of our ecosystem and are essential in maintaining a balance in the populations of Montana and other states in the country. We have invaded bear habitats, encroached on their living spaces, and threatened their existence. We must learn to respect all other living beings on the planet and to understand the impact of our actions. Please stop hunters from attacking bear populations in Montana right away. Bears do not deserve the threat of extinction for humans to live.

Please do not allow the trophy hunting of grizzly bears. It undermines the goal of boosting the population and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

The world's megafauna are disappearing from the earth, largely due to human activity. We must save wild animals and the wild places on which they depend. Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

The less we disturb animals' lives in the wild, and the more we retain their natural habitats, the better off the planet, and all of its inhabitants, will be.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I have been informed that the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. I am writing to ask you not to allow this.

In my view, the only reason to control animal populations through killing them is when science shows that not doing so would be detrimental to ecosystems. An example would be deer, where their numbers are so high (typically through lack of predation) that they are reducing ecosystem diversity due to over-browsing.

While I do not object to controlling animal populations by lethal means consistent with the above, I do object to executing this by untrained, or poorly trained, volunteers ie 'Sportsmen'. Such control should be done by trained personnel who can identify and eliminate individual animals by age and gender to minimize the number required to achieve the population reduction goal. Allowing 'Sportsmen' to do this risks overkill, accidental or purposeful killing of non-target species, cruelty through poor marksmanship. While it may be attractive to used 'Sportsmen' because they will pay for 'privilege', society has a financial duty to pay for wildlife management activity made necessary by man's disturbance of natural systems.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Now is your chance to raise your voice for grizzly bears and tell the State of Montana's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council that you are entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

I just read that the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. I am writing to express my strong opposition to the idea of allowing the trophy hunting of grizzly bears.

Since they were given ESA protection, the grizzly has made a slow recovery, yet today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. I understand that the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks. This is unacceptable. These lands belong to all of us, and most of us don't want our bears to be slaughtered.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

The grizzly bear is a quintessential symbol of Wilderness and wildness. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

I am entirely opposed to this proposal.

Respectfully,

In 1964 I worked as a field geologist in Alaska. I shot and killed a brown bear at about fifteen feet after having fired a warning wadcutter round over its head to no avail. Our helicopter had chased it from a fellow a few miles away and toward me. It was curious and I was defensive. I remain sorrowful about that necessary shot. I owe the brownies one and am incensed that fellow humans would kill them for what they consider sport. Let us retain a bit of space on this North American continent for grizzlies to live and roam freely and safely. I trust they still do where we mapped and left. Their cousins merit space in the lower forty eight.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

To the Montana Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

We are Ravalli County residents who are writing to support your work to minimize human-grizzly bear conflicts as their population increases. We look forward to a time when this keystone species has expanded into more of its historic range, but this expansion will inevitably be accompanied by increased human-bear interaction. Since Montana has enough excellent habitat to support significantly more bears and the existing population is still very low, we think that it is premature to remove them from the protection of the Endangered Species Act. Any such decision should be based on the judgement of independent scientists, who feel that there are adequate numbers to ensure, not just species survival in the area, but also a genetically diverse population. We also feel that the grizzly bear levels are too low to sustain hunting pressure, if the bears were to be delisted. Instead of delisting bears, or permitting them to be hunted, the State should focus on improving connectivity between populations of bears and between areas with bears and suitable habitat that does not yet have resident grizzlies. Connectivity is crucial to establish and maintain a healthy, genetically diverse population.

In order to minimize human-large predator conflicts, the State should be planning and implementing measures, such as subsidizing the installation of electric fencing around domestic animals, farm fields, and gardens, plus requiring and subsidizing bear-resistant trash disposal containers in potential conflict areas. These would have the added benefit of reducing conflicts with other large predators, such as wolves, mountain lions, and black bears. We would be willing to pay increased state taxes in order to pay for these measures. Also, charismatic large animals are a significant draw for tourism, which is a burgeoning industry in Montana.

Again, thank you for taking on the endeavor of planning for the future. We look forward positive, science-based recommendations.

Sincerely,

Kathryn Tilly and Joe Rimensberger

Grizzly Bear Advisory Council
Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks

P.O. Box 200701
Helena, MT 59620-0701

Subject: Reject any proposal to allow trophy hunting of grizzly bears

To Montana Governor Bulloch and the Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

I am strongly opposed to any proposal to allow trophy hunting of grizzly bears and strongly urge Montana's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council to reject any such proposals.

"Our duty to the whole, including to the unborn generations, bids us to restrain an unprincipled present-day minority from wasting the heritage of these unborn generations. The movement for the conservation of wildlife and the larger movement for the conservation of all our natural resources are essentially democratic in spirit, purpose and method."

-- Theodore Roosevelt

I am very disappointed to learn that, even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the federal Endangered Species Act, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the Endangered Species Act. Disturbingly, under such a proposal, trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

"What is the nature of a species that knowingly and without good reason exterminates another?"

-- George Small

As you know, after grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act in 1975. While some progress has been made over the past 45 years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. Unfortunately, compared to the previous 40-some years, there have been a record-breaking number of grizzly deaths in Montana in the last two years.

"Nothing is more priceless and more worthy of preservation than the rich array of animal life with which our country has been blessed."

-- Richard Nixon, on signing the Endangered Species Act on December 28, 1973

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live. If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the grizzly bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

"Every man who appreciates the majesty and beauty of the wilderness and of wild life, should strike hands with the farsighted men who wish to preserve our material resources, in the effort to keep our forests and our game beasts, game-birds, and game-fish--indeed, all the living creatures of prairie and woodland and seashore--from wanton destruction. Above all, we should realize that the effort toward this end is essentially a democratic movement."

-- Theodore Roosevelt

Again, I am strongly opposed any proposal to allow trophy hunting of grizzly bears and strongly urge Montana's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council to reject any such proposals.

"A thing is right when it tends to preserve the integrity, stability, and beauty of the biotic community. It is wrong when it tends otherwise."

-- Aldo Leopold

Thank you for your consideration of my comments.

Christopher Lish

Grizzlies put the wild in wilderness and should be left alone to grow and roam these territories. Trophy hunting only supports a small number of people.

"The greatness of a nation and its moral progress can be judged by the way its animals are treated"-Ghandi

Have we not advanced into thinking, caring human beings? Is this what happens when we allow the radical hunters and commercial interests to take over our country? These animals serve as Keystone species and are an extremely significant necessity to the ecology and the environment. Does anyone realize what will happen when we thoughtlessly and cruelly remove them? We are demolishing our planet through our thoughtlessness, cruelty and inconsideration for these animals and the rest of our environment.

As apex predators--and as large omnivores--grizzly bears are a vital part of their ecosystems. Without these bears to keep the large herbivores in check, trees another plants can be overgrazed and the entire landscape can change, leaving the balance of nature in jeopardy.

Please do not permit trophy hunting of Grizzly Bears. They are an endangered species with limited habitat. Permitting them to be hunted in Wilderness Areas may cause them to move into more areas inhabited by Humans and lead to conflicts. Many tourists come to Montana to view and photograph wildlife. Far more than come to trophy hunt.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Grizzly Bears are the icon of American Wilderness! Keeping their population out of harm ways, chance killing and hunting is like preserving American Past. There are few places on Earth where great bear can live, hunt and safely raise their young without being the targets in trophy shooting and senseless killing.

Please help protecting American tradition of preserving magnificent wild lands and amazing animals living there. Stop the shooters, let the bears live where they have been for hundreds of years.

I say no to legal hunting of grizzly bears in Montana, ever. They are faced with ever-increasing pressure from many directions, are killed on purpose and inadvertently, and have low reproductive rates. Past decades of protection have helped the population recover and they need that continued protection to remain viable. Trophy hunting serves no purpose for the bear, nor for the public. It is strictly a glory seeking recreation with destructive outcomes

People who do this killing are not even human and as a member of the human race I take offense at calling people who do these acts human. America's grizzly bears are treasures that belong to ALL Americans. It is a great joy and privilege to see a grizzly in the wild and not just in a zoo. As a top predator, they have an important role to play in the balance of nature, as do wolves and cougars, coyotes, lynx and foxes, eagles and hawks. Grizzlies can and should be protected, and should NEVER be "trophies." There is no sport in killing a grizzly that is minding its own business by some killer who has a high powered rifle, but just wants to kill. Decades ago, I put aside my rifle and shotgun and took up a camera. The thrill of hunting and "shooting" is marvelous, but NO ANIMAL IS HURT. Trophies, if one needs them, are photos. People have to be taught to care, to help the natural world be more of a blessing to more Americans. Protecting wildlife is where the pride is. Montana is a magnificent, beautiful State that I have loved to visit and hope to visit again. I have long-time friends who live in Montana. If Montana people & government kills grizzlies and other iconic predators, a huge reason to visit will be lost, as will the wildlife. Besides that, you will find yourselves overrun by deer and elk and the entire ecosystem will suffer imbalance. Enlightened management is what America needs in every State. I pray you will care for wildlife, not let it be slaughtered.

Grizzlies have been hunted and driven out of many areas, where they were once very plentiful. Due to the ensuing scarcity they have been reintroduced back into North America to regain the biodiversity of the area.

Why are Grizzlies important to the ecosystem? They affect the ecosystem from the top down. When they are no longer present in the ecosystem ungulate populations can grow out of control and alter the vegetation structure in an area. Another reason why Grizzly Bears are so important to the ecosystem is that they assist the vegetation by doing a lot of digging and foraging. This helps to mix up the nutrient level in the soil which helps to increase the ammonium and nitrate levels of the soil which helps other plants species. This helps the ecosystem where they live to be more bio diverse and have a more even equilibrium.

All animals are

On the verge of extinction due to urban sprawl and we need to preserve what's left.

Yes to a managed Grizzly Bear hunt. Let the wildlife managers manage with all tools available.

In order for the Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council to effectively accomplish their goals, it's imperative for council members to seriously weigh and consider a managed grizzly bear hunt. This cannot be stressed enough. As bear mortalities increase and human-bear conflicts continue to rise, the status quo cannot be maintained as it'll come to the detriment of both the grizzly bears and Montanans.

A proposed grizzly bear hunt will be highly regulated by Montana FWP and only permit a few select bears to be taken in the process. These types of managed hunts can restore balance, involve more stakeholders impacted by the bears, and subsequently boost funding for grizzly bears through a lottery or similar mechanism related to the hunt.

Involving more hunters and consumptive users who are impacted daily by grizzly bears can ensure the council's effectiveness at accomplishing their goals, promoting biodiversity, protecting ungulate species, and reducing human-bear conflicts.

As an American who loves and values wildlife and wild lands, I urge you to continue to protect the grizzly bear and to NOT allow any hunting of the species. The bear is an icon of wild America we have spent millions bringing back from the brink of extinction, and its value in dollars for wildlife viewing tourism is far greater than its value as a hunting tag.

Studies have shown that a single animal can generate several millions in wildlife viewing tourism dollars over its lifetime, a resource that continues to pay dividends if the animals are allowed to live. The value of one hunted animal is small and the transaction is final. Hunting grizzlies makes zero sense in the economic aspect.

Also important is the national, and international, majority view that grizzlies should not be hunted. Ignoring the wishes of the majority for the favor of a small minority costs politicians their seats and often also costs their appointeds THEIR SEATS. Hunting bears doesn't make sense from a political standpoint, either.

America has made it clear that hunting grizzlies is not acceptable. A majority want the bears protected. They want to see the bears alive in their natural habitat. They want their kids and their grandkids to be able to see the bears alive in their natural habitat. PLEASE DO NOT APPROVE HUNTING OF GRIZZLY BEARS.

Sincerely,
Kelly R Sweeney

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. Please do not approve trophy hunting.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not a human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Thank you for your consideration.

Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

I am unequivocally opposed to any sport hunting of grizzly bears in my home state of Montana. Grizzly bears are an iconic American species that are still recovering after being pushed to the brink of extinction by human activities. Hunting will only exacerbate pressures on grizzly populations that are under increasing stress from habitat loss and human encroachment and as an alpha predator, grizzly bears are absolutely vital to maintaining healthy, functioning ecosystems in Montana. Under no circumstance should sport/trophy hunting ever be allowed. When I come to Montana to visit my family, I also come to see wildlife, not hear about people killing it off.

I am entirely opposed to the cruel and selfish idea of allowing "trophy" hunting of grizzly bears, or any animal. What kind of message does it send to our children that if you murder an innocent animal for "sport" you get a trophy? How about encouraging respect and compassion for nature and its native animals that have been here long before us? Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival. I do not live in Montana, nor have I ever visited or know someone who lives there, and I generally refrain from commenting on how states (other than the one where I live) should conduct their affairs. But I am very distressed and disgusted to find out that a trophy hunt of Grizzly bears is being considered. I believe that the killing of animals for sport, especially apex hunters that are necessary for nature's balance, is a capricious and arbitrary waste of life. I would hope and encourage a reliance on fulsome scientific data is pursued before any decisions are made that would adversely affect the fragile success of Grizzly bear's increased population.

Grizzly bears are protected by the ESA due to over hunting and habitat loss. If and when they are delisted, immediately allowing them to be hunted would be reckless and most likely force them back on the ESA list. Allowing individuals to have dead trophies on their walls is not equivalent to having the keystone animal alive and performing a critical function that supports its natural habitat.

I am writing to implore you to not allow trophy hunting of Grizzly Bear's in your state. These incredible bears are still struggling to restore their population and that is with years of protection. It is vitally important that we maintain balance in our environment. Our impact has made the ecosystem we all live in increasingly fragile. I implore you to reject trophy hunting and help protect these majestic creatures.

Killing animals just for the pleasure of the killing and bragging rights over it is rather appalling in general, and considering the number of grocery stores in our nation, stupidly unnecessary. Grizzly bears are not appearing on the grounds of rich white men to attack them. There is no need for rich white men to grab their rifle to protect their mulitmillion dollar condos. Please, there is no reason for this slaughter and it is disgusting that we pander to these gross individuals who are only looking for a thrill, the transient sense of adequacy and an illusion of manhood.

To the State of Montana's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council, I'm entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear. Grizzly bears were once pushed to the brink of extinction in the lower 48 states, so in 1975 they were listed for protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA). While some progress has been made over the past 40-plus years to recover grizzly bear populations, today there are still only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

We write to urge you to NOT allow grizzly bear trophy hunting on Montana's public lands. We respectfully submit that with less than 1,500 grizzlies remaining in the contiguous 48 states and occupying less than two percent of their historic range, it would be irresponsible to add trophy hunting to the long list of threats to the continued recovery of this great bear. Seeing a grizzly in the wild is a rare experience enjoyed by too few people these days. Don't make the experience even more rare by allowing a selfish, privileged few to hunt grizzlies for their personal pleasure.

Thank you for your consideration of these comments.

I oppose Trophy Hunting of Grizzly Bears. Climate change is already impacting the health of the population as is the expansion of development. Trophy Hunting often kills the best genetic males and weakens the population genetically. It also stresses bears when they are trying to fatten up for the winter. Many times hunters wound bears that could make them extremely dangerous to others.

Please keep bears alive does 1500 animals sound like recovered to you. With no corridors to connect to other viable populations. We need to keep protections in place. Plus they have a very low reproduction rate so 1500 isn't enough to start up a baited hunting zones everywhere. They're freaked enough now you want to what cut their population in half. If this is a whale or something we wouldn't say oh 1500 or whatever low number you want to get it to down to is considered a recovered species. You first have to establish other connected species in say Canada. Must be the trophy hunters trying to get their way here.

Hunters are sociopathic or psychopathic thrill killers who would hunt human beings if they could get away with it. The government won't be happy until the last animal standing has been wiped off the face of the earth. Then the hunters will start thrill killing human beings because they are predators. LEAVE THE BEARS ALONE. YOU ARE TORTURING US WHEN YOU TORTURE AND KILL ANIMALS BECAUSE NORMAL HEALTHY PEOPLE VIEW THEMSELVES AS PART OF NATURE THAT SHOULD BE PROTECTORS NOT PREDATORS. We need better ways to live with Grizzly Bears rather than hunting. Tax breaks for people with livestock loss. People want to live where wildlife is then live with wildlife don't kill it.

The grizzly bear population still only stands at a maximum of 1,500 individuals; found within just 2-3% of their historic range; despite their protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA) and decades of conversation work since 1975. This is still a tiny number - although a vast improvement on the shamefully low 350-400 individuals the grizzly bears were reduced to.

And now this partial recovery is set to be undermined by trophy hunting.

The cause of death of these slow breeding animals (females stop reproducing in their mid to late 20s and half of the 10 cub-average produced during their lifetimes are likely to die in adolescence) is dominated by their deliberate killing via illegal poaching and legal lethal deterrents, the removal (aka destruction) of 'problem' bears and hunters putting themselves in perilous situations resulting in lethal self-defense. Add to this deaths by rail and road and the impact on bear populations will soon result in a negative growth rate.

51 bears were killed in 2018 and another 51 bears lost their lives again in 2019 - a 6.8% population loss in only 2 years! These deaths also severely reducing the genetic pool by limiting interactions between populations within the Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem and the Glacier region; further impacting future breeding rates and health.

It is clear that the protection of grizzlies under the Endangered Species Act (ESA) needs to remain in place. For the state of Montana to preempt the removal of this protection and put in place plans to allow trophy hunting on public lands; including wilderness and wild buffer zones around Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks; is a complete dereliction of duty and betrayal of this long fought for grizzly bear recovery.

Their recovery is tenuous at best. To remove the current protection offered by the wilderness areas of Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains is counter-intuitive to their survival and the very concept of wilderness.

As a keystone species, grizzly bears are essential to the wider ecosystem. The 98% of land that no longer benefits from their services is unquestionably poorer without their presence. To pen them into a fraction of the viable habitat in which they should exist is unnatural.

Trophy hunting is the epitome of disdain for any species - a day of egotism, plastered over social media. Why do hunters want to bag a grizzly bear? Because they are endangered!

Rather than promote trophy hunting the state should be further supporting the recovery of grizzly bears and the work of the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes of Montana by building underpasses and overpasses - especially on railroads - to reduce vehicular deaths of bears and many other species.

Governor's Grizzly Bear Advisory Council Public Comments

In life and in business, you are either part of the problem or part of the solution. I sincerely hope the Montana Grizzly Bear Advisory Council will choose to be a significant part of the solution rather than a major part of the problem.

Thanks to decades of advocacy by caring individuals like me, grizzly bears in the lower-48 states are currently protected under the Endangered Species Act (ESA), making it illegal to harm, harass, or kill these bears, except in cases of self-defense.

Unfortunately, the state of Montana is currently considering a plan to authorize trophy hunting of grizzly bears as soon as ESA protections are removed. I am speaking up for grizzlies by letting the Montana Grizzly Bear Advisory Council know that I strongly oppose trophy hunting.

A lawsuit against the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (USFWS) in 2017, when the agency illegally tried to strip ESA protections from grizzly bears living in the Greater Yellowstone region, was successful. At that time, the suit also successfully blocked planned grizzly bear trophy hunts in Idaho and Wyoming.

We've stopped grizzly bear trophy hunting before, and now I ask the Montana Grizzly Bear Advisory Council to protect the Grizzly once again!

Thank you for the opportunity to submit comments. I strongly oppose trophy hunting of grizzly bears in Montana. While the grizzly bear is slowly recovering after near-extirmination, these majestic species remain absent from nearly 98 percent of their historic range.

I and many others who love these bears have worked so hard for four decades to bring the grizzly bear back from the brink of extinction, so the idea that Montana would authorize trophy hunting is discouraging and distressing. Trophy hunting is unethical and a vestige from a bygone era. It is particularly inappropriate for this iconic grizzly bear that is still imperiled and has a very slow reproduction rate.

Grizzlies face continuing threats from climate change, dwindling key food resources, illegal poaching, lack of connectivity among populations, and the negative impacts from roads and railroad tracks fragmenting their habitat. In fact, the past two years saw record rates of grizzly bear mortality in Montana. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears in Montana will only lead to a further decline of an already fragile population and would make a connected metapopulation-essential for recovery of the species-a near impossibility.

There is no evidence that trophy hunting is effective at managing grizzly bear populations. Studies show that trophy hunting does not reduce human-bear or livestock-bear conflict. Research also shows that trophy hunting does not increase social acceptance, but may have the opposite impact.

The Council should take into consideration the perspectives of Tribal Nations, many of which consider the grizzly sacred.

If grizzly bears are delisted, at the very least, Montana must wait to see how they do without the Endangered Species Act's protections before allowing trophy hunting. It's just too soon to consider hunting. In 2017, Montana Fish, Wildlife & Parks (FWP) recognized that a hunt should not be proposed immediately after delisting.

The #1 animal that tourists, who contribute about $1 billion annually to the economy of the Greater Yellowstone Ecosystem, hope to see in Montana is a grizzly bear. Bears are not only revered by many, but they are also very valuable to our nature-based economy.

Montana FWP and the Fish and Wildlife Commission must update the inaccurate and outdated Grizzly Bear Policy, which mistakenly states trophy hunting is an effective tool to prevent human-bear and livestock-bear conflict. Montana FWP should also put its energy and resources into assisting communities and recreationalists to prevent bear-human and bear-livestock conflict.

Again, I strongly oppose trophy hunting of grizzly bears in Montana. Please choose to be part of the solution rather than a force for the extinction of this remarkable species, a major tourist draw for Montana's economy.

Even though the grizzly bear is still protected by the ESA, the state of Montana is considering allowing trophy hunting of grizzlies once they are de-listed from the ESA. Trophy hunting of grizzly bears would be allowed on public lands, including wild lands within America's National Wilderness Preservation System and wild public lands immediately adjacent to Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

As a US citizen who is extremely concerned about wildlife, I adamantly oppose allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

Today there are only an estimated 1,500 grizzlies in the contiguous 48 states and they are found within less than 2 percent of their historic range. Grizzly bears have very low reproductive rates and continue to face excessive death rates caused by cars, trains, hunters claiming self-defense, poaching, livestock-related "control" actions, and other heavy-handed management. In fact, the last two years have seen record-breaking grizzly deaths in Montana.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Please don't allow trophy hunting.

If trophy hunting was allowed by the state of Montana, iconic Wilderness areas in Montana like the Bob Marshall, Great Bear, Scapegoat, Lee Metcalf, Absaroka-Beartooth, and Cabinet Mountains Wilderness would no longer be safe havens for the Great Bear.

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Thanks.

NOBODY should be allowed to hunt Grizzly bear for trophy hunting. I believe in substance hunting if you use the whole animal, but to just go out and kill so you can put a animal head on your wall as a "trophy" is so appalling to anyone who respects wildlife. This needs to end now. We are loosing so many different wildlife species to Trophy hunters now. They are wiping out the worlds wildlife FOR EVER!!!! THEY WILL NEVER BE THWRE FOR FUTURE GENERATIONS!!

Grizzlies are a keystone species who deserve land on which to thrive; they do not deserve to adorn the walls of humans whose hubris and self-absorption encourage them to find value in the killing of an animal for the sole purpose of an arrogant "brag" about their inability to recognize that we live in an interdependent ecosystem. Grizzlies are worth more to this planet than to have their taxidermied heads hanging on a wall.

As humans, it is our responsibility to be stewards of the land, and to be clear, I am a hunter. What I hunt contributes to my family's food store for the year. I understand land management and ethical, responsible hunting practices, and I am absolutely opposed to the killing of a species for the purposes of arrogant and ignorant display. We can be better than this, and we need to be better than this.

I implore you to make a decision that places the good of ALL--not just humans--at the forefront and that demonstrates to the rest of the States the importance of learning to value all species and to protecting the value of the lives of our fellow inhabitants of this planet.

Thank you.

Dear MT Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

I moved to Montana from the midwest in 1986 in order to be able to live near and have access to the wild lands that our state contains. The wildness of these places is, in part, defined by the large mammals that inhabit them, including apex predators.

I am writing to express my considerable concern that grizzly bear trophy hunting would be considered in Montana.

Grizzly bears are able to exist in only a fraction of their historic range and their estimated population is a mere 1,500. In addition to loss of grizzly numbers related to contracting habitat, their population numbers and genetic diversity continue to be high risk due to low reproductive rates and high annual excessive deaths.

We are very fortunate to live in a state with its wild resources and I feel strongly that we have a responsibility to carefully steward those resources for future generations.

I am completely opposed to the creation of grizzly trophy hunting in Montana and strongly encourage you to remove this proposal from consideration.

Thank you for your consideration,

Ned Vasquez

Dear Montana Grizzly Bear Advisory Council:

I write to express strong opposition to the idea of allowing Grizzly Bear trophy hunting under any conceivable circumstance, now or in the future. The grizzly is an endangered species occupying less than 2% of its historic range.

I will work and put my dollars toward helping the grizzly bear return to my home state of Colorado and adopted state of California. Hope Montana ranchers will help make that happen. Let's work to gather in a positive way to help the grizzly expand their territory into all of their western home states.

Please stop setting arbitrary grizzly maximum population number barriers. Let nature work. As food becomes scarce the bears will move to more suitable habitat naturally without human meddling and interference.

Use non-lethal methods to prevent and avoid dangerous conflicts between humans and grizzly bears. Make this a safe, physically harmless but intensely unforgettable learning experience to the reasonable extent possible. Don't harm the bears in any way. Bears can have bad days they likely remember and not want to repeat just like human beings.

We need these predators to restore balance to wild lands in Colorado and California. Grizzly bears belong just as much in the wilderness, if not more, with all wildland species.

Growing up in a San Miguel County Colorado ranching community in the 1950's I witnessed wildlife slaughter on an unbelievable scale. The carnage shaped my entire life.

Eisenhower was President. Wayne Aspinall of western Colorado was my Congressman and House Resource Committee Chairman. Taxpayer funded his Wildlife Damage Control was created, igniting a killing spree of every single species that might eat a blade of grass or annoy a cow or sheep in any way.

The bodies stacked up quickly. Coyotes, prairie dogs, bobcats, mountain lions, golden eagles, bald eagles black bears, badgers, large hawks and even rattlesnakes to name some. Many more starved because their prey species base has been completely eradicated by the federal government to boost the ranching community profit margin. But most of all to get Aspinall reelected by ranchers in Colorado.

The government trapper would lay the carcasses in long lines beside a well-travelled road so everyone could see what a good job he was doing?

Much if not most of this years- long massacre occurred between 1954 and 1959. In 1954 I was 9 years old. There were no environmental laws to stop the killing. So I am asking Montana ranchers to finally help set things right for the grizzly bear for one.. I know we can do it to gather and restore the species in every state where the grizzly once lived free from politics and greed.

Do the right thing. Help the Grizzly Bear thrive in Montana right now. For the most part this can be accomplished by simply leaving the big bear completely alone. Grizzly can figure out things all by themselves and thrive on their own merit if allowed to do that by human beings.

Sincerely,

James Woods

I am frankly sickened by any attempt to allow needless trophy hunting once grizzly bears are delisted from the protection they need and deserve under the Endangered Species Act.

Your management team should be ashamed of even proposing such a decision and clearly shows that all of you do not respect or value the life of a majestic species that is a symbol of real wilderness and what's left of it.

Every one of you should be speaking out to defend and protect Grizzly Bears that have no voice and are such a unique species that are found in very few states. I can assure you that killing Grizzly Bears by and for trophy hunters would never occur in the North Cascades of Washington.

I am entirely opposed to the idea of allowing trophy hunting of grizzly bears. Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs contrary to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.

PLEASE take the right actions to ensure the future of our Grizzly Bears and the environment. Thank you.

The natural environment is struggling enough as it is, without humans adding to their plight. We have decimated their natural habitat, taken over most of their territory and unleash a bunch of hunters that don't need to add heads and hides to their walls. It's insanity, if you think about it. Imagine hanging human heads or hides from our own walls. It's an awful image. Why then is it okay to do it to animals that are just trying to get by?

We have to be good stewards of this planet!

Grizzlies are keystone species that help shape the ecosystems in which they live. Their numbers should be allowed to fluctuate according to habitat conditions, not some human-conceived population limit. Where grizzlies thrive, so will the wild places in which they live.

Allowing trophy hunters to shoot grizzly bears, including deep within Wilderness areas, runs CONTRARY to increasing grizzly bear numbers and allowing the Great Bear to recover and reoccupy critical habitat essential for their survival.
